9. Principles for protecting the register

A. Access to register

Access to Job applicant register is held by Operations Manager, other Management support personnel, Managing Director, Deputy Managing Director, Procurement holder Juha Vanhanen and all supervisors of the organisation.

B. Handling personal information

The contracts about appropriate processing of the data that are required by the directive are made with the data processors, and the parties are responsible for following the contract in their operations.

C. Manual material

Any material to be retained manually is exceptional. Every employee with access to the material takes care of the data with precaution and makes sure that the data is not disclosed to third parties and that information, especially the CV's printed out for job interviews or other purposes, are demolished as privacy waste when they are no longer needed.

D. Data processing in the operating system

The employees handling personal information are responsible for their own acts and operations according to the agreements and confidentiality obligations they have undertaken.

Employees having access to the operating system will follow Gaia's ICT safety policy when dealing with data. According to the ICT safety policy personal information is not dealt in public places or sites. Electronic data content of the register is not copied unless exceptionally and specifically determined. Electronic copies are stored appropriately and destroyed immediately when they are not needed.

10. Definition of retention period of personal information

Information is gathered when job applicant fills in personal information into Gaia's register that is held at Webropol Oy's survey platform. Data is erased biannually so that retention period is every three years.

11. Data subject's rights

11.1. Right to obtain access to the personal information

The data subject shall have the right to require a confirmation about whether his or her personal information is processed or not. If personal information is processed, the data subject has the right to obtain access to the personal information to acquire all other information written in this statement. The request to obtain the named access shall be done to the contact person of the data controller.

11.2. Right to require the rectification of data

The data subject shall have the right to require the data controller, without any undue delay, to rectify deficient or erroneous piece of information found in the register related to the data subject. Moreover, the data subject has the right to receive an extract of the personal information rectified and completed for example by receiving a supplement from the data controller.

The data subject has the right to acquire correction of his or her information in the register. Correction request shall be done to the contact person of the data controller.

11.3. Right to erase of data (“right to be forgotten”)

If the data subject objects the processing of their personal information, the data is removed from the data content. Erasing data during a recruiting process implies that information needed for this process to evaluate person’s suitability fails and therefore, recruiting process ends for this person.

Under the above-named circumstances, the claim of the data subject to be erase their personal shall be submitted in written to the contact person of the data controller.

11.4. Right to restriction of processing

The data subject shall have the right to require the data controller to restrict the processing of their personal data for instance in the following circumstances is:

- a) data subject claims that their personal information is inaccurate. In this case the data processing of the personal data is restricted for a period during which the data controller can make sure the accuracy of the data.
- b) processing of data is against law and the data subject objects the erasure of personal data and instead claims restriction of data processing.
- c) data controller does not any more have need of the personal data in the original purpose, but the data subject needs the data to be claimed, presented or defended when lodging a complaint.
- d) data subject has objected the processing of personal information against 21 Art. 1 awaiting the proof to verify if the justification of the data controller overrules the justified grounds of the data subject.

Under this circumstance the claim by the data subject to restrict data processing shall be submitted in written and with justification to the contact person of the data register.

11.5. Right to object to the processing of personal information

The data subject shall have the right, in connection with their personal specific circumstances, to object to processing measures of the data controller at the data subjects' personal information.

The data controller may not extent the data processing unless the data processing can be proved to be based upon the data controller's legitimate ground and that there lies a significant, justified reason which overrules the interests, rights and exemption of the data subject or that the act is necessary for grounds stipulated under a juridical claim or defense.

Under this circumstance the claim by the data subject to restrict data processing shall be submitted in written and with justification to the contact person of the data register.

Erasing data during a recruiting process implies that information needed for this process to evaluate person's suitability fails and therefore, recruiting process ends for this person.
